Paediatrician in Lagos: children's surgery, specialists and NICU care

Three things at published prices: planned surgery for children, consultations with paediatric specialists, and neonatal intensive care. Children are not small adults, so every visit starts with a proper examination, and a test before treatment.

How care works here

1. The child is examined, properly
   A full examination at every visit. A great deal of what is treated as malaria in Lagos is something else that an examination would have found.

2. Tested before treated, where it matters
   A malaria test before antimalarials. Treating a negative test is how resistance spreads and how the real diagnosis gets missed.

3. A specialist when your child needs one
   Where a child needs a cardiologist, haematologist, endocrinologist, neurologist or rheumatologist, the paediatrician arranges it through Mezo, with the fee shown before you book.

4. Surgery explained to the family first
   You are told why, what the alternatives are, and what recovery really looks like, with an all-in price before a date is set.

5. Newborns, day and night
   The neonatal unit takes planned admissions, transfers and referrals at a published daily rate.

See a paediatrician online. A private video call from anywhere in Nigeria, with your child beside you at home and the fee shown before you pay. Video suits a fever that is settling, cough, rashes, feeding and growth worries.

Where is my child seen?

In Lagos. The coordinator confirms where your child will be seen, and the price, before you pay. Many reviews can also be done by video.

Is every fever malaria?

No. Viral illness, urine infection, pneumonia and typhoid all present with fever. A test and an examination separate them.

Does my child need their tonsils out?

Often not. The paediatrician counts the actual episodes of proven infection, or checks for obstructed breathing in sleep, before anyone involves a surgeon.

Can I use my HMO?

Yes, on plans covering paediatric care. Surgery and admission need prior authorisation and the desk files it for you.

A child in danger needs a hospital now. A baby under three months with a fever, a fit, difficult breathing, or a child who will not feed or is hard to wake: call 112 or go to the nearest emergency department. A newborn in danger should go to the nearest neonatal unit first.
